Course Description

This course covers the physical, emotional, social, and cognitive changes that occur during adolescence and how these changes affect adolescent behavior and life. Drawing from developmental science, education, psychology, sociology, and other disciplines, this course analyzes adolescent development from an interdisciplinary perspective and explores effective ways to understand and interact with adolescents.

After taking this course, students should be able to: describe and critically discuss major theories and research findings related to adolescent development, discover practical ways to solve problems related to adolescent development, and communicate effectively with youth.
