Course Description

This course enables students to explore various aspects of Irish culture and identity in an interdisciplinary and interactive manner, focusing specifically on society, literature and language. Students are introduced to key themes, debates, texts, influences and events that help to provide a greater understanding of how Ireland evolved into the country it is today. The course examines how the language of place and space relates to society; Ireland's Celtic influences; the evolution from manuscript to print culture; the tradition of oral narrative; and literary representations of Ireland in both the English and Irish languages, from early modern sources through to twentieth and twenty-first century texts.
