Course Description

This course gives students insights into the dynamics and effective leadership and management of teams within organizations. It provides students with the knowledge, skills, and analytical capabilities needed to practice teamwork in modern organizations and to lead teams to achieve successful outcomes. It explores the nature of teamwork in terms of how individuals effectively build agreement to shared goals and courses of action and facilitate organizational movement toward the achievement of these goals. In particular, it highlights theory and research that accounts for the characteristics, issues, and contexts of teams. Students make note of individual differences that contribute to team behavior and examine the situations that determine the salience of these differences.
