Course Description

The course examines how meaning is socially constructed through media. Semiotic analysis reveals the meanings of various signs which may be overlooked in everyday life and to open up the possibility of different interpretation.

As an introductory and interdisciplinary course to the study of media and culture, classes will incorporate academic approaches from both the social sciences as well as the arts and humanities. The primary goal of the course is to broaden perspectives to become effective citizens who can critically engage various issues pertaining to contemporary media and culture.
