Course Description

The course explores corporate power and how it influences law-making and law-enforcement. Students study the key drivers of corporate crime/harm, along with their social impacts. Students also examine the basis of corporations' structural and agency power, and corporate influence on the production and dissemination of science. The examination of the causes of corporate crime/harm will focus on organizational and structural factors, while investigation of the social impacts of corporate crime/harm focuses on the negative effects on human health, wellbeing, and the environment. Finally, students examine the social responses to corporate harm, including public shaming and corporate sentencing.
