Course Description

This course explores the organic connection between design and theory and builds an effective and integrated design methodology by examining how design interacts with social contexts and diverse relationships.

The course investigates how discourses traditionally considered external to the field of architecture—such as those from the social sciences, cultural studies, and environmental theory—inform, shape, and enrich architectural practice and production.

Students learn the design principles that appear in architecture and art, and based on this, they study how to apply them to architectural forms.
