Course Description

This course explores ideas and representations of race, gender and enslavement in 18th and 19th century British Caribbean and the wider Atlantic world. Focusing on questions of colonial connection, representation, identity, creolization, resistance, and power, the course engages primary and secondary materials in order to analyze and critically interpret the ways in which those who were enslaved related to, and resisted, the oppressive systems under which they were forced to labor, as well as the convictions and actions of enslavers and anti-slavery campaigners.
