Course Description

This course explores the historical development of football in England and its broader social, political, and economic contexts to provide a deeper understanding of modern sport culture and industry. From its origins in public schools and working-class communities to the globalization of the Premier League, changes in club ownership, fan culture, and media dynamics, the course examines a wide range of topics including how football has changed and exerted influence within social contexts such as imperialism, class, popular culture, and media. By engaging with key moments and transformations in British football, students gain critical insights into the structures and issues that shape the contemporary sport culture and industry.
