Course Description

This course introduces the study of law and the principles which constitute the foundation of studies in law. This course provides general outlines of issues related to current law, including the Constitution, and the basis of legal philosophical principles.

Students are introduced to a basic understanding of the concept and ideology of law: Based on the philosophical and theoretical background of what law is and why it exists, legal ideologies such as justice, freedom, and order are explored.

Students learn the basic structure and concepts of major positive laws such as the Constitution, civil law, and criminal law, and based on this, they directly analyze simple cases to develop legal thinking.

The course also covers career exploration of legal organizations. Students explore the roles and entry paths of various legal organizations, such as judges, prosecutors, and lawyers, and presents practical prospects for career paths that connect law majors.
