Course Description

Health issues are highly politicised (domestically and diplomatically), and health governance has been complicated by involving diverse actors with different agendas and approaches. This course considers the questions: How "global" is global health? What are its normative implications? Therefore, this course explores the role of law and ethics in global health governance, including but not limited to the work of related multilateral institutions, policy implementations, research activities, and political processes.

The course is divided into two parts. The first part looks at the normative dimension of global health, particularly reflecting on the contestation and application of core concepts, theories, and analytical frameworks. Part II turns to its empirical dimension to identify the legal and ethical accounts of different global health issues.
