Course Description

This course prepares students to enter the ever-evolving 'world of work' by exploring the dynamics that influence current and future employment trends and how to respond to these evolutions through self-adaptation. Students explore the socio-economic and business environment that futurists anticipate for the next decade and develop career strategies to address the challenges posed by the rapidly evolving work environment. Students acquire the necessary skills in interpersonal communication, relationships, group discussions, and presentations to effectively respond to the demands of a more fluid and dynamic global work environment.

The course is more than a language course as it also explores socio-pragmatic competence in professional settings through development of discourse analysis and strategies, identification of both general and specific needs and requirements in given and ever-evolving situations and development of constructive approaches to satisfying those needs based in part on multicultural perspective and sensitivity.
