Course Description

This course provides first-hand knowledge about China and its global impact in two interconnected stages. The first part looks at China itself and asks how it is different and not-so-different from the West by examining China's recent history, its culture, society and politics, study how China is portrayed in Western media. In the second part, we move to "global China": how do the "domestic" factors studied in the first part of the course shape China's decision-making at a global level? This part of the course focuses on its role in Africa, Asia and in the West.
