Course Description

This course is part of the Laurea Magistrale degree program and is intended for advanced level students. Enrollment is by permission of the instructor. By the end of the course, students know the material sources available for reconstructing the production processes and the function of objects and structures found in the archaeology of the ancient world, coping with the technical and anthropological aspects. They recognize and critically examine the archaeological documentation relating to production sites and places of consumption in ancient finds; they also know how to identify the diagnostic elements of material culture and have the tools to frame information in its correct chronological, historical, political, and social context.

The course deals with Archaeology of Production in both theoretical and practical perspectives. A diachronic overview is offered, focusing the examples on the Mediterranean and European areas in Antiquity. The course is broadly divided in three blocks of lessons:

1. Theoretical and methodological issues
2. Craft processes
3. Thematic studies related to the discipline

Readings and discussions, visits to museums and laboratories with hands-on activities, and seminars are scheduled during the course.
