Course Description

This practical application course covers the basics of conducting research in psychology and how to conduct a study on cultural psychology topics. As a unique combination of two different courses, Research Methods and Independent Study in any APA (American Psychological Association) accredited universities, this course encourages students to take advantage of their immersive cultural experience in Korea.

Students should be prepared to bring their own phenomenon of interest to class: observations of certain individual behaviors, social systems, and cultural norms that intrigue you are the starting point. We will develop a researchable question from the phenomenon, design a study to answer the research question, collect data to test your hypothesis, and write up the entire process as a research paper. Potential opportunities to present your work for a larger audience can be provided.

Topics include Science for descriptive and applied methods and their design, Theories and hypothesis testing in descriptive and applied research, Research question development, Ethical issues, Observational research, Measurement and measurement construction, Survey research, Single-case and small-n research, Data entry and analysis, Writing in psychology, Implications.

Prerequisite: An Introductory or General Psychology course is required.
