Course Description

This course provides students with a critical grounding in the major psychological schools that shape the field and examines how these influence educational doctrine and practices in the 'modern' classroom. Throughout the course, students are introduced to different ways in which human thoughts, feelings and behaviour can be examined encouraged to consider how different perspective can be used in the context of education. With the introduction of multiple theories, critical thinking skills are developed comparing and contrasting different interpretations of the similar contexts. Potential biases and assumptions are questioned each session. The assignment is an applied case study scenario. The assignment requires students to examine a case study of an individual's circumstances and to discuss to what extent one chosen perspective is able to explain the situation. Students can decide which perspective they want to apply and are encouraged to develop a deeper understanding of those chosen perspective, building on the introductory class
