Course Description

In this course, students examine the nature of the mind, including insights from metaphysics, epistemology, and philosophy of language. This relates to empirical work in the cognitive sciences (psychology, neuroscience, artificial intelligence, linguistics and robotics). Topics students explore include the mind-body relation, problem of other minds, creature and machine consciousness, the nature and causal efficacy of the mental, self-knowledge, mental representation, and embodied, embedded, extended, and enactive cognition. An emphasis is placed on critical examination of arguments for and against competing accounts of the mind.
