Course Description

This is a comparative study of educational aims and systems in numerous national and societal contexts. This course provides an introductory overview of education policies and practices across multiple countries. Topics include educational goals and nation-state development; models and approaches in comparative education; education systems and policy structures; cross-national achievement data; access and opportunity; language and education; colonization and decolonization; history education and national identity; refugee and immigrant education; media literacy education, and peace education.

Through comparative analysis of education systems and practices around the world, the class gains a foundational understanding of how education policies and systems function in different contexts and proposes potential solutions for improving current policies, systems, and/or educational practices.
