Course Description

This course explores a range of contemporary Irish writing and film in the context of recent Irish culture, history and society. The course discusses a range of work in various genres (fiction, poetry, drama and/or film) from the 1960s to the present. On successful completion of this course, students are able to: Read and analyze a selection of Irish works - novels, poetry, plays and/or films from the 1960s on; Discuss the shifting social and cultural conditions which these works both reflect and help to shape; Apply a range of key critical concepts to the works studied; Write critical essays at an advanced undergraduate level in response to set questions on the course material.
