Course Description

This course provides an in-depth study in the understanding and modification of human behavior in organizations. It explores factors that affect behaviors in an organization at three different levels: individual, interpersonal, and team. This course uses a cooperative learning approach in which the instructors and students work together closely, using a variety of learning methods to achieve the course objectives. The topics covered include introduction to organizational behavior (OB), performance, organizational commitment, job satisfaction, personality, motivation, ability, groups and teamwork, decision making, leadership, power, and negotiation and conflict management. The course content is delivered through interactive mini-lectures, assigned readings, and in-class discussions and activities. Additionally, cases, exercises, and assignments provide experience in applying organizational behavior concepts.
