Course Description

This course introduces the analysis and regional understanding of the new territorial reality existing in Spain, based on the changes in the valuation of physical and productive resources, the new organization of the State, and the socioeconomic repercussions of the internationalization of the economy and integration into the European Economic Community. Emphasis is placed on the necessary skills to analyze, explain, and synthesize the geographical factors that give Spanish regions their unique character and diversity during the last decades, paying attention to city typologies and urbanization models.
