Course Description

This course provides a forum for students to develop their own creative voices through the medium of writing. Students write their own creative pieces (short stories, novel extracts, poems, personal essays) and discuss them, along with the work of others, in an encouraging space. Grounded in a philosophy that to write well is to read well, the course also discusses a number of fiction, creative non-fiction and poetry texts. By engaging in close reading, editing, and writing exercises, students develop and hone creative skills applicable to a broad range of disciplines, both in academia and the creative arts.
