Course Description

This course is intended primarily for students majoring in Korean Language and Literature, therefore full fluency in Korean is required as the course focuses on structural and analytical understanding rather than pronunciation practice.

This course introduces the study of Korean speech sounds, covering the phonetic characteristics of Korean using scientific methods, including acoustic analysis with Praat. Students analyze and explore how these sounds differ from those in other languages, especially English. Students also identify and describe the articulatory and acoustic properties of Korean vowels and consonants. Students gain both practical analysis skills and insights into cross-linguistic sound patterns.
