Course Description

This course introduces critical issues and dynamics of international relations in South East Asia(SEA) and Oceania since the end of World War II.

Students explore regionalism and regional cooperation in SEA and identify how the ASEAN and its individual members have dealt with various issues and managed regional order and stability. In addition, this course seeks to understand how SEA and Oceania copes with great power competition.

The course examines the following topics: Regionalism in SEA and ASEAN; ASEAN and US-China Competition; Oceania and China's Rise; ASEAN and Australia/New Zealand. Topics include Is SEA a coherent region? What are key cultural, political, economic, or geostrategic patterns and variations that exist across the region?; How does ASEAN compare with earlier efforts at regionalization? How stable/rigid are regional norms and institutions in SEA?; How do the great powers influence regional affairs in SEA? How do the great powers influence regional affairs in SEA?; International Conflict in Southeast Asia; What are cross-border security threats in SEA? How have SEA nations and ASEAN dealt with such security threats? How do SEA nations cope with environmental challenges?; and China’s Rise and Australia’s Indo-Pacific Strategy.
