Course Description

This course examines multilateralism, global governance, and regional integration as an important area of study within international relations. It focuses on global governance system such as the United Nations (UN) and other international organizations (WHO,UNHCR,IAEA), and regional organizations such as European Union (EU), the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN), NATO, OSCE, ARF and other inter-regional cooperation mechanism (APEC, ASEM, FEALAC).

The course explores how the UN and regional organizations can survive and develop in today's world after the second term of US President Trump has started in January 2025 with 'America First' foreign policy.

The course also considers the first year of President Trump and impact of Canadian PM's proposal of 'Middle Power Coalition' as a third way of protecting multilateral and regional organizations.

Topics include History and theory of global governance and multilateral regimes, Structure and function of the United Nations, Peace and security, Human rights and development, Regional integration/expansion in Europe and Asia-Pacific, Inter-Regional cooperation mechanisms.
