Course Description

This course introduces the field of international development cooperation, with a focus on understanding its historical evolution, key actors, and policy frameworks. Students explore how global development agendas have changed over time and examine the roles played by bilateral donors, multilateral organizations, and civil society in shaping development practices. Special attention will be given to the case of South Korea, which has undergone a unique transition from aid recipient to donor. Through this lens, the course will analyze Korea's development cooperation policies, its institutional actors such as KOICA and EDCF, and the country's strategic priorities in the global development arena.
