Course Description

The theme of ‘community’ is not one that can be pinned down in any straightforward and simplistic way but requires attention to multiple dimensions. This course uses empirical studies and perspectives from a range of international studies to examine the nature of change and significance through which communities and ‘community’ can be read. The experience of changing community life will analyze some enduring themes such as: belonging, identity, mobility, construction of community, and social ties. Another key objective of this course is to explore historical and contemporary attempts to engage communities (community sector) through policies of development and support.
