Course Description

This introductory course reviews the current problems of violence and exploitation under the perspective and works of the foremost classical and contemporary thinkers. The course requires the development of intellectual curiosity and critical thinking that underpins the reflection of the different concepts, theories and proposals of the authors. As a learning outcome, the class will be able to identify expressions of violence, vulnerability and exploitation present in their daily reality while addressing possible alternatives of conflict resolution, recognition and solidarity that promote different forms of relationships between human beings.
