Course Description

The course delves into the stages of the history of the ancient West in which ties were forged not only with the rest of Mesoamerica but also with distant regions such as South America and the Southwest of the present-day United States. It addresses historiographical issues such as the centralist biases that have influenced and continue to influence the study of the West, as well as methodological issues by exploring how the study of works of art can be an important tool for addressing topics as difficult to document as oceanic contacts, extensive trade routes, and migrations.
