Course Description

This course provides an examination of the cultural frameworks and social aspects of gender roles, personhood, human sexuality, and kinship systems, analyzed through ethnographic examples from a diverse range of settings. It equips students with the analytical tools to engage in theoretical debates concerning core concepts such as gender, sexuality, kinship, marriage, and the relationship between nature and culture, as well as exploring how the experiences of gender, sexuality, and kinship vary according to the regimes of politics, law, and materiality in which they are embedded.
