Course Description

The course is intended for students in French or in other subjects who are interested in acquiring knowledge of Francophone Africa and in discussing in French issues of the relationship of France to its former African colonies. The course is taught entirely in French. The course reviews France and Francophone African countries from the perspective of their joint history and political, economic, cultural, and socio-linguistic aspects. Emphasis is placed on the present development of these countries and the remaining relations between them and France (the so-called Françafrique), and how these countries are organized in the French-speaking world. The teaching includes texts from papers and journals and television and online documents dealing with present-day Francophone Africa and la Françafrique. On the basis of this material, students practice oral skills in discussions and oral presentations in French.
