Course Description

The course is aimed at students who wish to learn more both about the French language's situation and global position in the twenty-first century, and about how the French language always coexists with other languages in different societies and how it can be studied scientifically e.g. through linguistic landscapes (paysages linguistiques). The course starts with a shorter series of lectures and seminars examining the question of multilingualism and identity based on sociolinguistics but also including elements from literature about cognition and psychology in multilingualism. Participants then choose a subject area within the scope of multilingualism with a specialization in French and work on under supervision.
