Course Description

This course provides an overview of key approaches in film studies, exploring film as an art form, an economic product, a social practice, and an object of theoretical reflection. Through lectures and mandatory film screenings, students are introduced to central concepts for studying topics such as the film industry, film form, film genres, and stardom. In seminars, students analyze films and supplementary materials (e.g., film magazines, advertisements, reviews) while developing their film analysis skills individually and collaboratively.
