Course Description

The course allows students to hear from a broad range of experts in social psychology, social cognition, and social neuroscience at UCL. The course offers interdisciplinary perspectives that are at the cutting edge of social experimental research. It has the following objectives: To provide students with an understanding of social determinants of cognition, judgment and behavior; and the interplay between social processes and individual processes, to familiarize students with basic methods used in social psychology, and to help students critically discuss research in social psychology in an interdisciplinary manner, in order to establish connections between social phenomena and psychological functioning.
