Course Description

This course considers the ways in which humans grow, change and mature across various life stages. Students consider the behavioral, emotional, physical, and cognitive changes which occur during these developmental stages. This course offers students opportunities to explore core development milestones during childhood such as language, moral and gender development, and core psychological topics such as the formation of relationships and how people learn. The course also focuses on real-world application; providing opportunities to consider the environmental influences upon development and critical consideration of the extent to which theories are applicable in the educational context.
