Course Description

During the lectures, the main theoretical concepts of Television Studies are discussed and historically contextualized, while simultaneously exploring their contemporary relevance. In the seminars, the emphasis is on conducting close readings of key theoretical texts and analyzing (post)television phenomena based on these readings. Students receive feedback on assignments aimed at enhancing theoretical and analytical knowledge, as well as refining their reading and academic writing skills. Students are expected to study the assigned literature and to make their assignments. Contributions to group work are expected through providing peer feedback on writing assignments by fellow students and actively participate in plenary discussions.
