Course Description

Students learn about the major mechanisms for the protection of human rights in the British Constitution and the role that judges have in enforcing human rights and administrative law. As such, students learn about the Human Rights Act 1998, the rule of law as a constitutional value, the process of legal accountability known as judicial review and relevant human rights topics, including but not limited to freedom of expression, the law governing protest in the United Kingdom, freedom of religion, and other relevant human rights topics. This involves detailed consideration of key pieces of primary legislation and international treaties relevant to human rights protection as well as important case law relevant to these topics. Students also consider and engage with many of the ongoing academic debates about these topics.
