Course Description

Since the 1980s, Lyon has undergone major transformations aimed at adapting to the context of globalization. Becoming a European metropolis has become the common thread that gives meaning to public interventions in the urban space. What are the results of these public policies? Has Lyon become a European metropolis? After an introduction in the classroom, the teaching takes the form of urban walks in the neighborhoods most marked by these changes. Students learn to read the cityscapes of a large European city, identify the actors of the production of urban spaces, and understand the typology of metropolitan areas.
