Course Description

The students learn to interpret and understand the process of globalization from the viewpoint of international trade in goods and services and factor movements. They learn the causes and consequences of international trade, the effects of trade policies, the causes of international factor movement and multinational operations, and the role of the World Trade Organization. Upon completing the course, students have acquired an empirical and theoretical understanding of the complex issues raised by the economic interdependence of nations and to analyze them in a systematic way.

The course initially focuses on international trade theory and policy, addressing classic questions such as: who trades what with whom? What are the effects of trade on welfare and income distribution? How do micro-aspects influence international trade? The course explores these questions through the lenses of both classical and new trade theories. This theoretical journey concludes with an overview of recent research on the role of heterogeneous firms in international trade. Subsequently, the course applies these models to examine various aspects of globalization, including the role and impact of multinational companies in developed and developing countries, migration, and protectionism.
