Course Description

This course explores the causes of underdevelopment and the models of development. It offers a study of the international cooperation system for development while considering its dynamic nature and its evolution from 1945 to the present day. This course discusses the actors (primarily donors and recipients) and forms of cooperation involved. It considers why problems in areas such as food, health, education, democracy, and human rights exist and what solutions development cooperation offers. This course examines the main issues affecting current cooperation while taking into consideration the Millennium Development Goals.
