Course Description

This course examines futures studies, a field vital for tackling complex issues in business, government, and society. Students will work individually and in teams to respond to a challenge set with the City of Sydney council to explore and propose a future worth wanting set in "Sustainable Sydney 2050." Students will learn and apply practical techniques and theoretical frameworks to: examine how change happens in complex systems, identify and interpret emerging signals of change, and engage peers and partners in exploring possible futures. Students will also critically reflect on how their values and personal perspective, and those of individuals, communities, and organizations, shape the way we imagine and create futures worth wanting.
