Course Description

International law, also known as public international law, is the foundation of our current societal model. It governs how states interact with each other; establishes universals of individuals, and regulates multiple international actors. International law principles aim to prevent international and domestic conflicts; protect individual liberties, and promote trade, among other goals. International law also deals with international institutions, each tasked with a particular function requiring general and specialized knowledge. This course is a general introduction to International Law aimed at non-law students, delving into its history, development, and current issues.

While legal instruments and documents will be used, no previous legal knowledge or training is required.
