Course Description

This course aims to let the students get familiar with the history of documentary and its major movements, recognize the differences between feature and documentary, learn the ideas and methods behind documentaries from a producer's perspective. The course will invite first-class documentary producers in China to have screenings and face-to-face discussions, teaching students about the creative process of documentary making as well as technical aspects such as shooting and editing. Meanwhile, this course encourages students to experiment and practise, the students must work in groups (at least three people) to produce a minimum half-hour-long documentary at the end of the semester. This will train the students to grasp basic documentary-making skills.
