Course Description

This course explores the theories essential to intercultural communication, deepening one's understanding of the influence of culture on perspectives, ways of thinking, behavior, and values. It also discusses the privilege of Japanese people as a majority group in Japanese society alongside concepts of discrimination, prejudice, and stereotypes against minorities. Last, it considers the role of educators in fostering citizenship among students in the current context of globalization.

This course is conducted entirely in Japanese. An N1 level of Japanese language proficiency is required.
