Course Description

This course introduces students to U.S. military history and covers the long history from the colonial era up to World War II. Themes the course discusses include: What is military history and what approaches are there to writing military history? Who and what are the subjects of military history? How have the US armed forces evolved in time and how have they shaped the course of events in US history? Why has the US waged wars and how have wars reflected back on US society, popular culture, and the military itself? What happens if one looks at the military through the lenses of race, class, and gender?
